Into the darkness

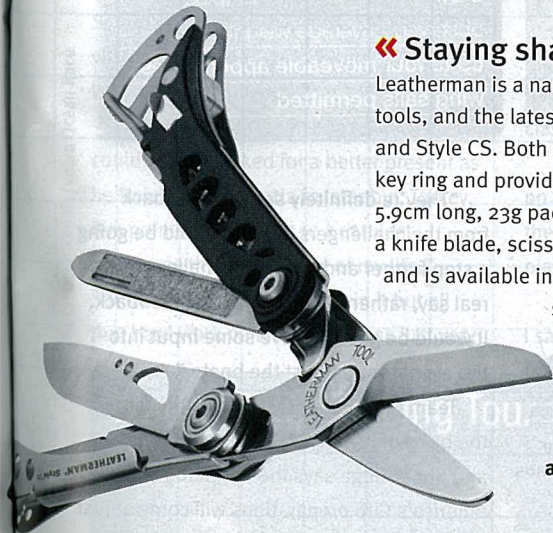

The newest product from OceanView's line-up of multi-sensor night-vision camera systems is the Apollo II HD. Targeted at the launch and cruiser market, this high definition thermal imaging camera is a low current draw, 9-32VDC solution incorporating a 640x480 resolution thermal imaging camera with new 4x digital zoom, ultra-low-light lens and 360-degree pan and tilt. As well as thermal imaging, the low-light sensor amplifies even barely discernable light to render a crisp, detailed picture in almost total darkness. Floating debris, channel markers and other vessels are easy to identify. Looking out for unlit or semi-submerged objects in passage or for manoeuvring in unknown waters and anchorages just got a whole lot easier. From $8999.

« Staying sharp

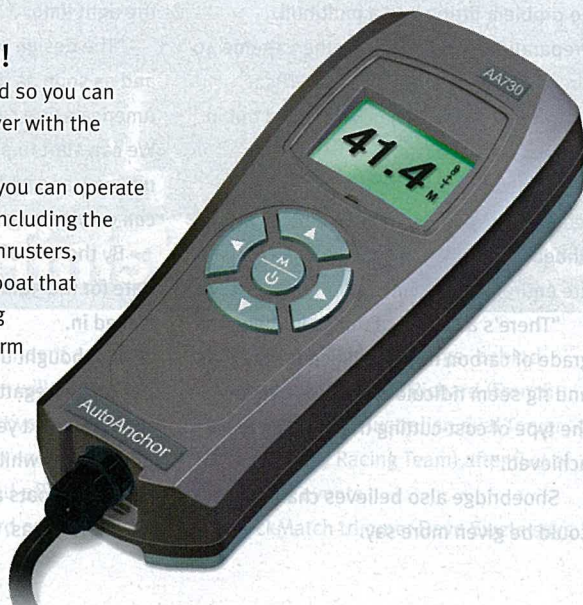

Leatherman is a name associated with quality multi-tools, and the latest models are the Leatherman Style and Style CS. Both are designed to be carried on a key ring and provide maximum convenience in a mere 5.9cm long, 23g package. The Style contains five tools: a knife blade, scissors, screwdriver, tweezers and a file and is available in several colours. The Style CS is a slightly larger, more modern-looking tool containing all the Style features as well as a carabiner/ bottle opener and tweezers.

» Anchors aweigh!

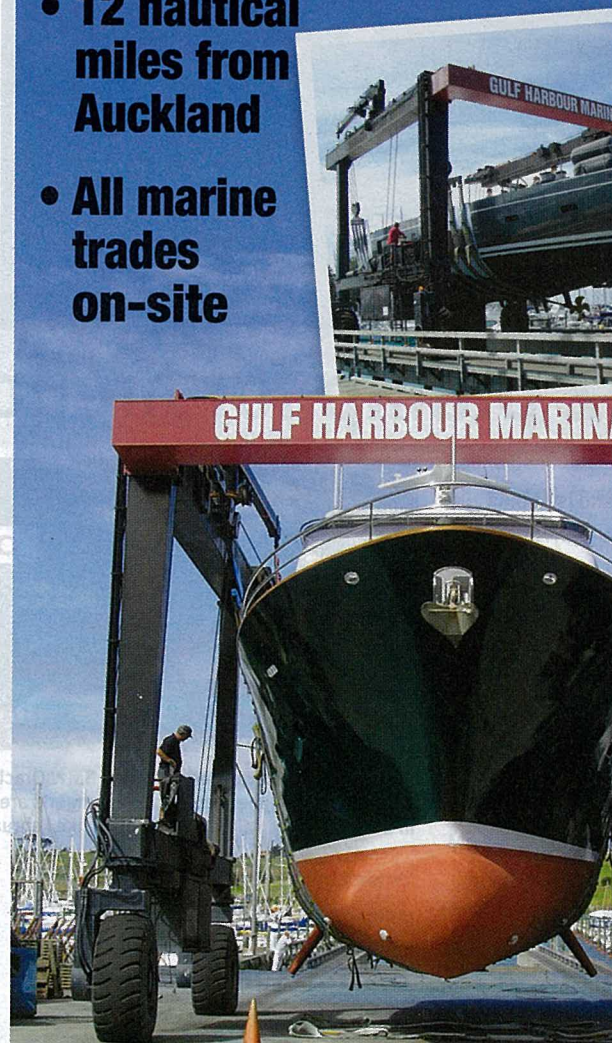

Getting your boat anchored so you can relax is now easier than ever with the AA730 from AutoAnchor. Using the AA730s remote you can operate six functions on the boat including the windlass, bow and stern thrusters, and anything else on the boat that requires a switch including transom door, swim platform or dinghy davit. These waterproof units feature a chain counter and come with four metres of cable. AutoAnchor: 09 419 1219 www.autoanchor.co.nz
